How child-friendly is the Government of Zimbabwe?

The African Report on Child Wellbeing provides an insight into the wellbeing of children in Africa and assesses the extent to which governments meet their obligations, through a ground-breaking Child-friendliness Index – developed by The African Child Policy Forum (ACPF).

The Government of Zimbabwe was found to be one of the less child-friendly governments in Africa

The Government of Zimbabwe ranked 37th in the Child-friendliness Index out of the 52 African governments covered in the assessment. This was mainly for two reasons: first, as a result of the Government of Zimbabwe not putting in place appropriate legal provisions to protect children against abuse and exploitation; and secondly, because of lower commitment in allocating adequate share of the national budget to provide for the basic needs of children. However it did show some success in achieving relatively favourable wellbeing outcomes as reflected on children themselves.

How well does the Government of Zimbabwe perform in protecting its children?

A number of indicators have been used to assess governments' performance in protecting children against abuse and exploitation (see report for the detail).

The ranking puts the Government of Zimbabwe 45th in respect of legal protection of children, indicating that it has performed fairly poorly in laying appropriate legal and policy foundations for the protection of children. Zimbabwe has ratified only four of the eight relevant child rights treaties (see Table 1).

Zimbabwe ranked 45th for its effort to put in place an appropriate legal and policy framework for children.

The Government of Zimbabwe performed well in respect to a policy for free primary education, national plan of action for survival, domestic laws on exploitation and traditional practices, and establishing a juvenile justice system. It did not have domestic laws to prohibit corporal punishment in any setting (see Table 2).

How does the Government of Zimbabwe perform in providing for children?

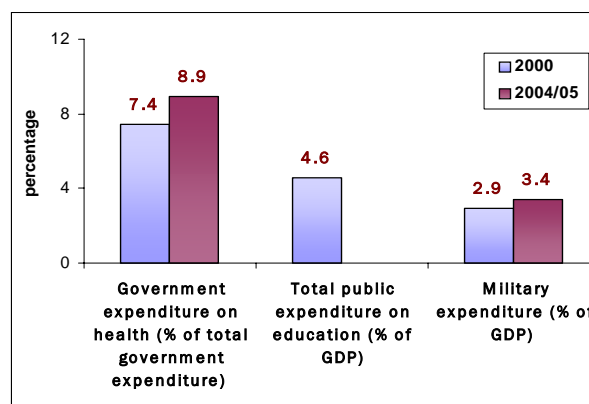

Provision for basic needs of children is measured based on two elements: budgetary commitment and child-related outcomes achieved. All the indicators used for budgetary commitment and child-related outcomes were combined to yield governments' performance score for provision of basic services for children (see Figure 1).

Zimbabwe ranked 28th in the combined
index for provision of basic services for children

The other set of indicators refer to the outcomes achieved for children. They measure governments' performances in terms of objective results achieved in services accessed and results reflected on children themselves. Table 3, below, summarises the indicators and the data used for this particular sub-dimension.
